691 The woman, seizing the she-camel owned by her first husband, replied: "My first husband ʿAwwâd is the father of my boy." 695

This moved the second husband to say: "Be it so, but then I claim a reward for helping the boy out of that hole to the light and for his upkeep, arẓi ḥaḳḳ eẓhâri leh min hal-ḥufra wa-r̤dâje leh."

"Thou art right; ʿAwwâd must give thee a camel for the upkeep," decided Mḳâṭ. And so it happened: the first husband gave the second a camel and took the boy home with him.

693 In judgments of blood feuds the winner of the case has to give the court ten she-camels; in disputes concerning a woman, one camel is paid; a mare, one camel; a she-camel, two meğîdijjât ($1.80); weapons, one gold pound.
